CSHE

The California Society for Healthcare Engineering (CSHE) is a professional society representing more than 1200 individuals who are actively employed in the field of health care facility engineering in California.

History

CSHE began with a regional chapter in San Francisco founded in 1956. CSHE incorporated as a statewide entity in 1970, and has since grown to 11 active chapters throughout California. CSHE is the California Chapter of the American Society for Healthcare Engineering (ASHE), which represents health care engineers nationally.

Board of Directors

The CSHE Board of Directors meets quarterly to conduct the business of the society. Each chapter has a representative on the CSHE Board. CSHE has established committees to review bylaws, codes, educational opportunities, finances, membership and publications. The California Hospital Association (CHA) recommends appointments to the Hospital Building Safety Board and the California Building Standards Commission Healthcare Facilities Committee in consultation with CSHE.

Benefits

CSHE offers a bulletin and website (www.cshe.org) to help members keep up to date on key health care issues. The website also posts important publications, such as the monthly California Energy Objective Report. Annually, since 1971, the CSHE Annual Institute has been held in various cities throughout California. CSHE members also are eligible to participate in the Mechanic Evaluation and Certification for Healthcare (MECH) Program, which offers health care mechanics the opportunity to become certified. Chapter meetings allow an excellent opportunity to discuss issues and develop educational opportunities with your peers. Through its affiliation with the California Hospital Association (CHA), CSHE members play a role in formulating regulator and legislative policy affecting health care engineering.

CSHE Mission

To serve as a resource for the personal and professional development of members, so that they are the best in the health care environment and qualified to address the unique needs of health care organizations.

CSHE Vision Statement

To be the preferred professional organization for the health care environment in California.

CSHE Meets The Need

The operational cost of a health care facility is related to its environment and equipment, which are the responsibility of plant engineering personnel. Health care engineering personnel have a personal responsibility to advance skills, awareness and knowledge to maintain a proper level of effectiveness and efficiency for optimal patient care. CSHE provides members opportunities to learn, network and exchange ideas to keep abreast of operational disciplines through local chapter meetings, the Annual Institute, e-mails, newsletters and seminars. We invite you to join CSHE, a progressive professional educational society.
